Young People

Neurodevelopmental Assessment

Who are we?

We are a team of people who work with children and young people who have Neurodevelopmental (ND) differences. A Neurodevelopmental difference usually means that people process information differently and think about things differently.

Why are you going to meet us?

You have been referred to our team because someone who knows you well or you yourself, think you may have a Neurodevelopmental difference.

This might affect things like learning, relationships with friends and family, communicating, expressing your feelings, controlling impulses and moving around.

Our job is to try and find out if you have a Neurodevelopmental difference.

More Information

Your parent/carer has been provided with suitable websites that you can look at together. Please see the parent/carer leaflet.

Not sure?

If you or your parent are not sure about continuing with the assessment, please contact us on the number in this leaflet.

What will happen?

Before you come to see us, we will find out how you are getting on at school. We will send a questionnaire to your teachers.

We will find out about how you have developed since you were a baby. We will get this information from someone who knows you well for example your parent or carer.

When we have all of this information, we may ask you to come and meet with us or see you in school. We will talk with you and complete some activities to find out more about you. This usually last about an hour

When we have finished talking to you, you can go home or back to school. Sometimes we are able to give you feedback on the day of your appointment

Once we have gathered all the information we need we will arrange to talk to your parent/carer to give them feedback. You can join in too if you want

We will write a letter about our meeting and send it to you and/or your parent/carer.
